As Russia's ally China can only offer moral encouragement in the event of a third world war that is likely to annihilate the vast Soviet Empire.

China will stand to gain much in a nuclear world war involving Russia and the West, as whichever side wins the slogging contest, the victor will become a spent force, exhausted, without further strength to resist even a light push-over from the descendants of the dragon.

MY PLAN FOR WORLD CUP SHAKE-UP

Put country's fortunes in hands of one club

Division Four? I give you A League club team selected en bloc to play for their country. This may sound a drastic measure, but it might prove the best solution for countries that cannot strengthen their international sides by more orthodox means.

> This way they would be represented by sides already tested and proven as teams. Moreover, it would have the advantage of allowing ground conditions and the nature of the opposition to be taken into full consideration.

tion and choose the club best. The scheme would encourage could be established between equipped to counter that style, rivalry among clubs for the players and a continuity of style, suited to summer conditions.

To be modified

But current form would be the chief guide to selection and, of course, this club-for to be modified in the case of a fop club whose line-up included "foreigners."

There might also be a case for including a player from another club. But his form would have to be really outstanding. Because a player has performed brilliantly for one club does not mean that he would automatically do so for another. We have often seen the case of a transferred star failing to cilck

Lack of cohesion

If England wants to do well in the World Cup of 1962 a party of players should be chosen in the next month so that they can get together as often as possible in training and work-out tactics,

At present, England players meet only two or three days The whole point of this scheme | before an international. This is is that it would enable the quite inadequate to develop the selectors to take advantage of cohesion demanded in seccer at an established combination, and the highest level.

In the tween league clubs and the last World Cup, for example, Brazil never fielded the same side twice in the competition.

> am not saying that the final party for Chile should be decided now. If an unselected player produced greatly improved form later this season, he could be included. But unless there were a whole crop of injuries, only one or two changes should be necessary.

Another Important point is that these players should be subjected to really concentrated training—and I mean concentrated. At present England practice sessions are lukewarm affairs-as they must be, coming so shortly before the big match.

More pep

I believe the England team should train together regularly and not just before each international match. The chief aim during practice should be to capture the atmosphere of the fortherming match as closely as possible.

Above all, rehearsals must be realistic, because moves which look promising in practice games can easily break down in the stress and strain of the actual match.

Tackles must be made as they were really meant, even though it involves the risk of injury. I think it is a risk worth taking in order to discover exactly which moves and tactics are worth pursuing.

We certainly think so, at Wolves. Many people were surprised when we suffered several injuries / in our pre-season public trial, but you learn very little from a trial conducted at half pace. Conversely, by going all out, you build up the fighting spirit of a side and a player knows how his colleagues react under pressure.

Some clubs might resent . their star players being subjected to such rugged training at international level since injuries could jeopardise their Cup or League hopes, But this is the sort of narrow outlook that has handlespped English football at national level for too long.

Stars useless

Clubs should feel happy, even privileged, to provide opposition for the national side, and they should play as if promotion depended on every tackle.

And if anyone believes this is too much to expect, I would remind them of what Gustav Sebes, manager of the great Hummarian team of the 1950s achieved with the full cooperation of his country's clubs. Selies found that it was useless to draw star players from various sides and then expect by playing them together for a few matches each year.

The national team he formed in this manner was besten by Hungary's best club team. So he chose groups of players from only a few clubs and these men were available for ciational team irgining at least twice; a week-

This is the way to achieve worthwhile, results. And it the Football Association and Football League cannot, co-operate on such a scheme, the future of our international socret does not look very promising.
